THE ORIGIN OF HALLOWEEN

Halloween traces its beginning to the Celtic festival of Samhain. The Celts lived in the areas of Ireland, United Kingdom and Northern France some 2,000 years ago. They believed that during the Eve of the Festival of Samhain the dead returned to earth. Costumes were worn and treats were left as a way to appease the roaming spirits.

As time passed the holiday was adopted by the Christian religion and became known as All Hallows Eve. Halloween is now an American holiday. Practiced by Irish immigrants, Halloween's popularity soared in the 19th century and has become even more popular in the 20th and 21st century.

Bowling League

Residents bowling hoping for a strike: to the left is Charles, in the middle is Priscilla and Gloria is on the right.

Excitement emerged as the residents prepared to go on a field trip October 3rd to Colonial Candle Pin Bowling in Worcester. The residents enjoyed themselves, with each of them taking turns whisking the ball down the bowling lane. Some would even comment on the weight of the ball as they held it and attempted to prepare to roll the ball. Others were excited and immediately plunged into the task ahead with the goal of knocking the ten pins down and getting a strike. With added participation this could be the beginning of the Blaire House Bowling League.
